The Youth Peace Camps were initiated by the Council of Europe in 2004, in cooperation with Europa Park in Rust, Germany, to bring together young people from conflict regions and to support them in initiating dialogue and cooperation. During this period the Council of Europe have organized 12 camps. The first regional Youth Peace Camp was held in Albania in 2012. Young people from the Balkan region, taking part in the Council of Europe 3 year long project Youth Peace Ambassadors Project and some former participants of Youth Peace Camps, have initiated a new regional Youth Peace Camp for 2013, to be hosted in Kosovo².

The Youth Peace Ambassadors Project is a Council of Europe youth sector project being carried out between 2011 and 2013. The project promotes and supports the role of young people in peace-building activities that contribute to living together in dignity and dialogue. The Youth Peace Ambassadors are young people from across Europe, active in youth led civil society organizations and projects. During the project, they learn about peace and human rights, they develop local projects for peace, and they advocate for human rights and dignity. They thus act as ambassadors for the values of human rights, peace, and intercultural dialogue, and they will also bring these values to youth work and to youth initiatives in their communities.

During the YPA project phases each participant has to prepare some project in their countries. Regional Youth Peace Camp 2013 Kosovo is an initiative of a group of Youth Peace Ambassador participants from the Balkan region. Their idea with organizing Regional Youth Peace Camp in Kosovo is to promote human rights, intercultural dialogue, youth participation and democratic citizenship processes in Europe. Young people are active citizens and protagonists of social change in conflict-affected communities and Kosovo as post conflict country is one of the countries which need to promote this values. The Regional Youth Peace camp Kosovo is supported by the Council of Europe, the European Union and the Ministry of Culture Youth and Sports in Kosovo.

Aim:
The aim of the Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo 2013 is to engage young people and youth organizations from different communities’ countries in the Balkan region in around Kosovo in dialogue and conflict transformation activities based on human rights education and intercultural learning and to provide them with a positive experience in living and learning together.

Objectives:
- To develop the conceptual and practical meanings of conflict, peace, and conflict transformation;
- To share among participants their personal experiences of conflict and violence and their coping strategies, identifying commonalities and specificities between them;
- To develop the competences of participants in conflict transformation and intercultural learning, including a critical understanding of the personal and collective identities and their role in armed conflicts;
- To learn about human rights and human rights education as frameworks for conflict transformation and dialogue;
- To learn from existing practices and experiences of people within the youth field working on dialogue and conflict transformation;
- To motivate and support participants in their role as multipliers and peer leaders in peace-building activities with young people from their organizations and communities.

As the Youth Campaign for Human Rights Online was launched in 2013, the Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo 2013 programme will place a specific emphasis on the role of Hate Speech in conflict and post-conflict situations. See also: www.nohatespeechmovement.org
The Facilitator and Training Team consisted of four facilitators, one Senior Trainer and two support staff. This team was further pedagogically supported by an Educational Advisor of the Youth Department of the Council of Europe. The facilitators and trainer were selected through an open call distributed in the Trainers Pool of the Council of Europe and the network of previous Youth Peace Camp participants. As a result 4 of the Facilitators were participants in the previous years in Youth Peace Camps. In terms of gender balance, there were 2 female Facilitators, 2 male Facilitators and both the Senior Trainer and two support staff were male.

Having previous years Facilitators and participants was a great asset to gaining insight into what worked well and what to avoid. Many comments and pieces of advice from these members of the team directed and formed strategy and programme design.

The responsibilities of the facilitators included:
- Assistance in selection of the participants of Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo
- Facilitate the learning experience of the participants
- Empower all participants in the project, regardless of region/background
- Conduct sessions within the programme
- Co-ordinate and run the daily reflection groups
- Be responsible for the National and Bi-Regional group meetings
- To support /lead small working group discussions
- Help the participants to work on peace multiplying activities in their own communities following the Regional Youth Peace Camp week

The senior trainer and support staff were responsible for:
- Supporting the facilitators in their responsibility to support the participants
- Develop conceptual parts of the programme
- Develop, implement and report on the programme of activities
- Coach and support the Facilitators in their work
- Coordinate the preparation process for the Regional Youth Peace Camp
- Support participants in their group and individual learning processes
The participants of the Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo 2013 were selected from over 80 applications. The applications are done directly on the Council of Europe online applications platform. The selection of participants was conducted by the Education Advisor of the Youth Department, project team and trainer.

Twenty nine participants were selected, between the age of 18 and 26, though only 25 eventually attended the Regional Youth Peace Camp. (2 Bosnian participants, one of the participants from Serbia and one from Kosovo cancelled at last moment). Participants came from four conflict-stricken regions, these were: Kosovo, Serbia, The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Albania.

There were Thirteen participants from Kosovo (Six Albanian speaking, Five Serbian Speaking communities), Six Participants from Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (Three Macedonian Speaking, Two Albanian Speaking and One Bosniak Speaking communities), Three Participants from Bosnia and Herzegovina, Three Participant from Serbia and Two Participants from Albania (1 Albanian and 1 Roma Community).

The diversity within the participants sub group was quite good. For example three of the Macedonian participants were Macedonian, Two Albanian, and One Bosniak.

Only one participant had some problems with communicating in English, on the whole however the majority was quite happy conversing and listening in English. As a group the participants were quite careful to be politically correct around one another and careful not to offend fellow participants from the ‘other’ side. In general communication process between groups went very good some special cases and debates in bi-regional groups and mono regional groups. Generally all participant have cooperated with each other and they remain in contact during all activities including social nights and face book contacts.

Day 7 Friday 20 September
Departure Day
This section of the report does not cover the entire Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo 2013 in detail but provides a description of the key parts in general.

The build-up of the programme aimed to allow participants to first learn to learn and work together as individuals and not only as members of their cultural group.

Individual & Collective Identity
Identity is an important question when it comes to working with young people from conflict regions. This topic needs to be addressed early in the week in order for participants to focus on knowing one another as individuals before categorizing each other in nationalities. This process is being challenged because participants were asked to identify themselves as coming from a particular country during the Media moment just before this session. However the sessions in the morning worked on the individual level and helped to give a brief introduction to one another, and thinking as individuals helps to create bonds within the participants as a team. Hence, hopefully a flow of political rage is avoided.

The session is split into two distinct parts, the first part is titled, “How do I see myself? – Individual Identity” This section will allow the participants to explore themselves and identify different elements that make up their identity, space was also provided for them to share with one another about themselves, hence breaking down barriers as they have opportunity to see each other as individual humans rather than the ‘enemy from the other side’.

The second part of the session is titled, “How do others see me? – Collective Identity.” Each participant made his or her personal identity collage and they went around and collected each other’s connections on the bottom third of their page.

The splitting up and discussing in sub groups according to eating habits was as complicated as the last time this activity was done, vegetarianism is not a good subject. The music genre offered more depth but with the inexperience of the team and a restless group the activity was very hard work to coordinate and control, ultimately the senior trainer Nik stepped in and took over.

Human Rights and Human Rights Education
The session has been dedicated to the group understanding the concept of dialogue and providing a safe space for the groups to share about how the conflict from their communities affects them as young people. This session and the following sessions begin the process of looking at the importance of promoting Human Rights, dignity and values, both personally and between opposing sides in order to enable dialogue.

The main approach taken was an interactive input. The first part of the session this was done thorough a question and answer approach, Nik would ask a question and the group would answer, this would give room for a little input.

The group was then given 3 questions on the purpose of Human Rights, in small groups they had to come up with a flip chart of answers to the questions. The questions are:
1. What is the date when the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was made?
2. What is the difference between a Declaration and a Convention?
3. How many other declarations or conventions do you know of?
Despite the questions not being fully through the group came up with some good responses and were all very similar. This was rounded off with an explanation of key words related to Human Rights. The last part of the session was based on a brainstorm of what a series of words such as Universal, Inalienable, Indivisible, Interdependent, All equal, All Complimenting, the right to Human Rights Education mean in relation to Human Rights. Despite the session being much input oriented in general the participants liked it and found it informative, though several commented that it could have been more active.

Exploring Conflict and Dialogue Dynamics

A positive, creative group dynamic has been built between participants through different activities on the first day. Before this session participants have been exploring individual and collective identity and how it influences them as individuals and how identities contribute to forming groups. After this session the group will start sharing their personal experiences regarding conflicts and present the conflict narratives of their regions. Therefore this session was an introduction to the topic of conflict dynamics and dialogue and aimed to expose participants for the first time to conflicts within this group and offer opportunity to reflect on them. Participants should reflect on how they normally react on a conflict situation and how certain reactions prevent dialogue from taking place.

Dialogue starts with the ability to listen to the content of what the other person is saying and being open for other perspectives beyond what you expect to see. Some listening and perception exercises can illustrate this simple fact and set the tone for the coming days.

Often the distinction between dialogue and a debate is not clear. While a debate is a competition between individuals based on rational arguments. A dialogue is a process which includes hearing and understanding the different perspectives on a situation and showing empathy for the related emotions. A dialogue is at the level of needs of individuals in contrast to positions on an issue like with a debate.

Conflict dynamics in a group are strongly determined by individual responses to a conflict setting, the five most common responses include: Avoidance, Accommodation, Competition, Compromising, and Collaboration. (Other terms and divisions also exist).

In different settings different behaviour patterns are beneficial. Responses to conflicts can reinforce or deflate a conflict. The interaction between participants in a conflict is relevant to explore and keep in mind when working on transforming situations of conflict.
Conflict is most often seen as negative, being destructive and often perceived as violent, (structural, cultural, physically), nonetheless conflict can also be an opportunity for learning and growth. It depends on how a situation of conflict is addressed and resolved.

During the session participants were asked to build buildings to house essential services for the community. After the construction works participants were presented with the city limits which were too small to host all constructions, they then had to agree on which they would leave out and why, this lead to heated debates. The activity was followed by short exercises illustrating the concepts presented throughout the day.
Experiences of Young People in Conflict Regions

This session is planned for the whole of the third day and will be followed up with more dialogue opportunities in the days after. A positive group dynamic was in place at this stage and participants had explored the concept of conflict and styles of communication regarding conflict the previous day. This session provided participants for the first time the opportunity to share their own and their peer’s experiences with the conflict in their region and how it affects them.

Until now participants have not been put in national groups but most often participants feel a strong need to present their countries narrative regarding the conflict in their region. This need is strengthened by the fact that participants from other regions often have little knowledge about the conflicts of the other.

This session will provide a facilitated opportunity for this exchange between them. The session provides the opportunity for participants to decide how they would like to present the experiences with conflict of young people in their region. Often participant’s choose country presentations based on positions held by their community or governments. But instructions throughout the day from the facilitators allowed participants to choose for a presentation on the effect of the conflict on them personally and their personal needs. The session concluded with multi-national group meetings, for the first time during the Youth Peace Camp. These multi-national meetings are facilitated to allow a dialogue to start, if this has not happened already.

Exploring the Concept of Violence
The previous 2 days have been dedicated to the group understanding the concept of dialogue and providing a safe space for the national groups to share about how the conflict from their communities affects them as young people. The team provided participants 6 Envelopes with descriptions of 17 violent acts they had to list from the most to the less violent acts. This was first done in national groups, afterwards the groups of ‘opposing sides’ compared their lists. This provided a bases to continue the dialogue regarding perceptions of conflict situations and violence.

Field Visit to Prizren
Religion is often used as a pretext to group people into collective groups that are in conflict with each other. Religion has also been a basis for exclusion and division of treatment of people within one community. Nonetheless religious leaders and inspiring figures have also been at the forefront of peace building initiatives and community interventions meaning to transform conflicts and build bridges.
Often young people have limited experience and knowledge about religious institutions other than their own, and often not even that.
Kosovo has known a long tradition of religious tolerance for diversity. It is valuable to explore this during a field trip to Prizren visiting main Mosque, Orthodox church and Catholic Church and other monuments of culture.

16.00 – 18.00 Visit Castle of Prizren
18.00 Departure from Prizren to Pristina

InterCultural Learning
Having covered some aspects of Human Rights and Human Rights Education the day before, this session now moves into more detail to explore Intercultural Learning and the importance of this as a means for understanding the other and reducing hostility between people. It is important that this flows from the previous sessions and builds on the Human Rights aspects in order to keep the development of the group and promote understanding between individuals and bi-national groups as a way of linking in to the future projects and follow up sessions of the following day.

No Hate Speech Online & International Day of Peace
The No Hate Speech Movement is part of the project Young People Combating Hate Speech Online running between 2012 and 2014. It was born from a proposal of the youth representatives of the Advisory Council on Youth and was endorsed by the Joint Council on Youth, which brings together the members of the Advisory Council on Youth and the governmental youth representatives of the European Steering Committee on Youth. This activity gives an understanding of what is the Hate Speech why we need the No Hate Speech Movement, which is the one of priorities of the Youth Department of the Council of Europe. This activity include also some action about international peace day by uploading messages and videos by participants in No Hate Speech online platform.

What Do I Do Next?
Participants taking part in Youth Peace Camp Kosovo were among others selected because of their multiplier potential. They are expected to use their gained knowledge, skills and experiences when going back to their communities and organisations and reach out to other young people. Participants are expected to be able to explain to other young people the work of the Council of Europe and especially for Kosovar participants the work of the Kosovo ministry of Youth. In the reflection groups of the past few days facilitators have been asking participant to reflect on how they can use their experiences gained during the day back home. This session is meant to guide the young people and help them make their ideas more concrete.

It is encouraged that the participants find common projects with participants coming from their own but especially from other communities. However initiatives from a single person that is very concrete and aims to challenge attitudes or behaviours within their group of friends, organisation or community are also welcomed.

This was followed by the exercise ‘What Can I Do in my Community’. During the individual exercise participants were asked to think and write their INTENTION FORMS as project ideas and share with other participants if they are similar. They then had to answer the following question: “What’s Your Idea?”, “Who you are going to involve”, “How you are going to realize your Idea? “When and where”? “What resources will you need?” Based on this question they wrote their intention forms which are shared with all participants, participants who had similar ideas they wrote their names in each other list and they discussed for future cooperation.
Conclusive Results

The Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo according to participant’s evaluations was successful and provided them with the possibility to learn and work together all young people from different community groups. On the last day of the Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo 2013 participants completed a written evaluation form, a summary of their responses can be found at the end of this report. The impression from the evaluation forms indicates a high level of satisfaction. The participants are very happy to have been involved in the Regional Youth Peace Camp Kosovo 2013. On the last day team of trainers also prepared artistic evaluation form which was attractive for participants and where they share their opinions about expectations and the fears that they had at the first day and feelings at the end of the camp.

The main success of the camp is primarily about relationships and networking. Participants reported that they had made new friends and connections for future cooperation’s. They discovered new things about the others and had the opportunity to be representatives of their own community. The opportunity to share their experiences and feelings was one of the most important aspects of the week. The participants also for the first time communicated with young people from ‘the other side’ and this was very significant for breaking the wall of conflict and starting communication in positive approach.
